TREATMENT OF CUT BLOOMS: Cut only fully bloomed flowers. Cut early in the morning before it becomes too warm or late evening. Then put stems in boiling water, one or two inches deep, and hold for one minute, keeping blooms away from steam. Next, place in deep cold water in a cool place for an hour or two before arranging.

AN INVITATION TO EVERYONE

You are invited to visit the Gardens, in the Fall, and see the dahlias in bloom. Come any day before a hard frost. They are at their best Aug. 20 to Oct. 15.

REGARDING BI-COLORS: Sometimes a bi-color variety will produce a solid color. This is possibly due to soil or climatic conditions. Try it at least two seasons as the condition will usually correct itself.

Join your local Dahlia Society and plan on entering some blooms at their next dahlia show. The State and County Fairs will also be glad to welcome your entry of any blooms that you desire to display. All of these shows merit your active support and we know you will derive much interest and pleasure in working with them. Start planning now what entries you would like to make for the coming shows.

Make Your Garden Work a Pleasure

Dahlias require care and take some work, of course, but when you learn to know them, love them, and maybe, even "talk to them", the "work" will not be begrudged—or wasted.

I know of no flowering plant that will respond more to a little special coaxing than the Dahlia. They just naturally make friends because of their unlimited variety of color combinations, sizes, forms, and individual characteristics.

Cultural Hints

Each year we have a great many requests regarding the growing and care of dahlias by customers that are planting a few tubers for the first time. We are offering the following in the hope that it will be of some assistance.

Upon receipt of your package of tubers from your supplier in the spring, open and inspect and if the soil is not in condition to receive them or if you do not have the time to plant, return them to the container and repack with whatever material they were shipped in. Leave in a cool place until you are ready to plant them. They should keep in a satisfactory condition for several weeks if kept covered and in a cool place.

Dahlias can be grown in almost any type of ordinary garden soil but will respond better in soils that have good drainage. We believe they do better when planted in the full sun but satisfactory results may be obtained when planted in a spot in your garden that receives only a few hours of sun each day, morning sun in preferable. One of the most important factors in growing good dahlias is "soil condition"; being more important than either type of soil or location of the planting in the garden. Be sure that you have the soil spaded and loosened thoroughly and then plant the tuber by laying it flat with the eye up and cover to a depth of about five inches. In sandy or light soils you may plant to a depth of six inches.

Do not plant too early. Wait until the weather is nice and the soil has started to warm up before planting. You always risk the loss through rotting if planting is done in the early spring when the soil is cold and wet. If early blooms are desired in the small varieties you can plant some years by the middle of April though you will run the risk of having them frosted in some localities. Here in the northwest the ideal time of planting comes as a rule during the first week in May. Planting may be continued through early June and still obtain good results.

For best results plants should be cultivated at least twice a week during the growing season. Try and keep soil loose at all times, this is especially true after watering. They will not need too much watering until the blooms start and then should be watered heavily about once per week or ten days. This can be done by using either overhead sprinklers or on the ground.

When your plant is about twelve inches high, or having from four to six pairs of leaves, pinch the top out, this will give you a bushy plant and more blooms to work with. Some disbudding should be employed to bring out the best possible size in the larger varieties and is also desirable in the cut flower varieties. When the buds appear you will notice that they usually come in clusters of three. The one in the center is usually the strongest. Remove the other two and this will send all the strength to the remaining one. The next two or three sets of branches—located just above each leaf below the remaining bud—should be removed, further increasing the size and growth of the flower and giving you a length of stem desired when cut. Many beginners feel that they are destroying too many blooms by this pinching out but this is not the case. You will have ample blooms and they will all be in good cutting and showing condition if you will follow the direction as outlined above.
